Photosynthesis is the process plants use to make food.

Leaves capture sunlight with a green pigment called chlorophyll.

Water from the roots and carbon dioxide from the air are combined.

The plant produces glucose for energy and releases oxygen.

This process supports almost all life on planet Earth.